'Best Practice Guidelines'

Do not leave the trailer door open for excessive periods of time as this may affect temperature or cause the refrigeration unit to malfunction. If loading large loads for chilling it may be more effective to load them in short time periods or to temporarily switch off the fridge trailer until loading is complete.

We recommend all hirers undertake their own risk assessment for use of the trailer by themselves or any individual under the command of the hirer in regard to their particular usage requirements.

Check the temperature read out of the trailer regularly through usage for your own due diligence. There will be a 2 degree tolerance up or down from the set point in normal operation as normal cycles of cooling and defrosting take place.

Do not stack goods above $\frac{3}{4}$ of the height of the fridge trailer or block the internal fan in any way.

If your trailer has two doors, use only one for access to minimise temperature fluctuation.

The fridge trailer should reach the set point in approx. 1-3 hrs from first starting, chilling or loaded product will depend on the amount loaded and how packed.

Working inside a fridge trailer should be avoided for long periods so as not to affect temperature adversely.
